Mother, friend, lover:
we heirs of thy torment,
could not keep vigil at your bedside.
Has this suffering gone too far?

Perhaps time will heal;
and folks will embrace again.
Led by your gleaming smile
we will rejoice, heedless of pain.

Uncertainty restlessly floats through space
as the victim has yet to be taken.
Breathing in its simplest form,
the essential—often neglected—soaked by the storm of bugs, maybe silent, maybe ominous.
